SBA proposes WOSB cert. rule; Wong says certification staff workload may increase 6-fold

WOSB certification implementation postponed to 2021

The Small Business Administration recently published its long-awaited proposed rule for eliminating self-certification for the Women-Owned Small Business (WOSB) Program and for setting up a formal certification process for the program.

Under the rule, the SBA would establish a no-cost WOSB certification process run by the SBA, accept some state and federal certifications, and also would authorize third-party certifiers that may or may not charge a fee for performing WOSB certifications.

Congress ordered the SBA to set up a WOSB certification program in the 2015 national defense bill. Nearly four and a half years later, lawmakers at a House hearing on the WOSB program on May 16 were critical of the SBA's delay—especially when they learned of yet another apparent pushback in implementation.

Another delay

A rollback of the implementation timeline was revealed at the hearing by Robb Wong, SBA's associate administrator for government contracting under the rule. The hearing was part of the House Oversight and Government Reform subcommittee on government operations, said in his opening remarks of the report recently released to the public.

Some unpaid invoices extended into March 2019 that had been due in late June of 2018 were 1,059 criminal convictions, with $2.8 billion recovered due to contract terminations and forfeitures and $1.5 billion recovered for fraud.

$334B in DOD contracting fraud

The Defense Dept. spent $334 billion on awards to 168 fraudulent contractors over the last five years, according to a new report to Congress on defense fraud. Three-quarters of that amount was related to two large defense firms. The companies were not named in the section of the report recently released to the public.

An additional $4.3 billion was recovered during the same five years, there were 1,059 criminal convictions, with a total of $792 million recovered through fines, restitution and property forfeitures and $1.5 billion recovered due to contract terminations and de- obligations following conviction.

8(a) owners allowed $750K

Under new net worth rule proposed by SBA

Small business owners would be eligible for participation in the 8(a) Business Development program as long as their net worth was less than $750,000 under the rule.

The current limit is $250,000.

The SBA is making the change to make the 8(a) net worth limit consistent with the net worth limit for its Economically-Disadvantaged Women-Owned Small Business (EDWOSB) Program.

Shutdown hit small biz hard

Small business federal contractors testified in a congressional hearing that they added millions to their debt and struggled to pay their employees during the 35-day government shutdown that ended in January 2019.

Up to 1.5 million contractors may have been negatively affected, and some of those impacts “continue to this day,” Rep. Gerald E. Connolly, chair of the House Oversight and Government Reform subcommittee on government operations, said in his opening remarks.

Some unpaid invoices extended into March 2019 that had been due in and business development.

At the hearing, Rep. Pete Stauber, R-MN, noted that the Government Accountability Office had recently indicated that a WOSB certification program would be in place at the SBA by Jan. 1, 2020. But Wong, at the hearing, mentioned implementation would take effect in June a year later.

"Did you just say 2021?" Stauber asked Wong at the hearing.

"Yes, sir," Wong replied.

"That is the frustrating thing," Stauber responded.

Wong's testimony

Wong gave an impassioned and candid explanation of the challenges of setting up the new WOSB certification program to the House Small Business Subcommittee on Contracting and Infrastructure. He said SBA staffing and budgeting limitations have hampered implementation.

"With the current (staffing) level that we have, we are basically trying to increase their workload by six times with a ‘thank-you-very-much-I-appreciate-you.’" Wong said at the hearing.

The SBA currently reviews about 2,000 applications annually for 8(a) certification with 53 staffs, and reviews about 1,500 applications annually for HUBZone certification with 17 staffers, he said.

Currently there are potentially 11,000 self-certified WOSBs that are likely to seek certification from the SBA, while the SBA has only 7 full-time employees devoted to WOSBs, he added.

Wong said he requested a three-fold increase in staffing to carry out the WOSB certifications but was told "no" by SBA’s Chief Financial Officer.

As a result of being denied extra staffing, Wong said he is trying to accomplish the task of certifying thousands of WOSBs with current staff by reengineering the workload among all existing certification staff in his division. Under Wong’s so-called "Blueprint" plan, all 8(a), HUBZone and WOSB reviewers will review applications for all three programs. Previously, each reviewer only reviewed those in his or her assigned program.

Wong said he is optimistic the new approach will be effective but he acknowledged that it has been an uphill climb due to "20 years of broken systems" and processes at the SBA.

"The challenge is to do something that is six to 10 times larger with the people we have. That is what we are doing," Wong said.

Asked if the quality of the reviews will suffer if workers are over stretched, Wong agreed that is a risk.

"We are trying to do as much quality as we can. We are not making a sacrifice of quality. That may happen. We can be criticized on the amount that we’re doing and the vigilance that we are doing. But I guarantee that we are trying to do everything we can do without asking for help," Wong said at the hearing.

 Asked at the hearing whether he has estimated the budget and staffing that is needed to effectively implement a WOSB certification program at the SBA, Wong said he is "working on it."

SBA’s proposed rule

Key elements of SBA’s proposed WOSB certification rule include:

• SBA would provide a no-cost WOSB and Economically-Disadvantaged WOSB certification process through a digital online application;

• SBA would accept WOSB certification from certain identified government entities such as state and federal Disadvantaged Business Enterprise programs;

• SBA would allow certification by SBA-approved third party certifiers, including for-profit entities charging fees;

• Unsuccessful WOSB Program applicants would be able to request reconsideration within 30 calendar days of notification of an initial denial;

• Applicants for WOSB certification would need to recertify every three years. Comments are due by July 15.

The rule also proposes changes in the allowed net worth of 8(a) owners for participation in the free enterprise system as an economically disadvantaged business owner.

The proposed rule states.

"The SBA believes that it is important to have the same economic disadvantage criteria for the 8(a) BD program as for the EDWOSB program, to avoid confusion and inconsistency between the programs," the proposed rule states.

SBA considered a $375,000 net worth standard for both 8(a) and EDWOSB. The EDWOSB program currently has a $750,000 limit.

"The SBA believes that it is important to have the same economic disadvantage criteria for the 8(a) BD program as for the EDWOSB program, to avoid confusion and inconsistency between the programs," the proposed rule states.

SBA considered a $375,000 net worth standard for both 8(a) and EDWOSB, but concluded that it was too low for “participation in the free enterprise system as an economically disadvantaged business owner.” So the SBA proposed $750,000 instead.

Comments on both the $750,000 proposed net worth limit and on a hypothetical $375,000 limit are sought by July 15.

GSA to host FAST in 2020

Scheduled for April 14-16

SBIR/STTR data rights changing

A new policy directive went into effect on May 2 for the Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) and the Small Business Technology Transfer (STTR) program. Under the directive, adopted by the Small Business Administration, there are significant changes to data rights for the SBIR and STTR programs.

For new awards, SBA will:
• Eliminate the extension of SBIR/STTR data rights through any follow-on awards;
• Impose a 20-year Protection Period; and
• Provide the government with Government Purpose Rights, after expiration of the Protection Period.

“The SBA decided that a 20-year protection period, with no opportunity for extensions, was a fair compromise that would preserve incentives for small businesses to enter the SBIR/STTR programs, while at the same time providing the government with an objective tracking measure and ensuring that those small businesses move toward commercialization quickly,” Morrison & Foerster LLP wrote in an analysis.

Column: Corporate Transactions and Affiliation Pitfalls

by Francis G. Massaro, associate, PilieroMazza PLLC

As a small business grows and expands, it may have opportunities to bring on new investors, provide equity incentives to obtain, incentivize and retain key employees and directors, and enter into acquisitions and other transactions with other entities.

These investments and transactions can support the business’s stability and future growth but may also raise unintended affiliation issues.

Because the Small Business Administration (SBA) includes the business’s affiliates when determining its size, pursuing these transactions may affiliate the business with other entities, possibly jeopardizing its eligibility under SBA programs and its ability to obtain contracts set aside for small businesses.

As a result, to minimize the risks associated with affiliation, a small business should understand how corporate transactions may affiliate it with other entities.

Stock Options and Convertible Securities

Stock options are useful tools to obtain, incentivize and retain key employees. They permit the employee to purchase shares of stock at a set price, allowing the employee to benefit from the increase in the underlying value of the option shares during his or her employment.

Convertible securities likewise are useful tools to attract investment in the business, while providing the owner of the security the opportunity to participate in the upside of ownership with less downside.

While stock options and convertible securities do not represent ownership in the business until the holder exercises them, they (and any similar “rights to acquire equity”) are considered “exercised” for the purposes of determining size.

The result is that the holder is deemed to own the shares in determining ownership and control of the business.

Depending on the number of shares represented by the options or convertible securities and the number of shares that the holder already owns, stock options or convertible securities can affiliate the business with an investing entity, even though that entity does not yet own the shares or currently exercise control over the business.

While stock options and convertible securities may affiliate the business with other entities that the holder controls, they will not divest control from an individual or entity that controls the business until the holder exercises the options or convertible securities.

Common Management

Entities may bring on new investors or owners as they grow or require additional capital. These agreements may permit the investor to name one or more directors to represent their interests in managing the business.

If the investor has the ability to appoint a majority of the directors, or if the directors that the investor appoints have the power to veto certain transactions, the investor will be found to control the business.

If the investor has similar arrangements with other entities, the business risks affiliation with other entities that the investor controls.

Agreements to Merge

The owners of a business may decide to acquire, or sell the business to, another entity through a stock purchase, merger, or other transaction.

Following the consummation of the transaction, the businesses will be affiliated because one will control the other.

However, agreements to merge can affiliate the businesses before the transaction is fully consummated. In fact, businesses are found to be affiliated when they have an “agreement in principle” to merge, which may be established while negotiations remain ongoing, often upon signing a letter of intent, and before the transaction closes.

The entity should understand how the transaction will affiliate it with other entities, including those affiliated with the other party to the transaction, and how the timing of the transaction may affect its size certification for proposals submitted prior to closing.

Joint Ventures

Rather than seeking new investors or an acquisition, a small business may pursue a joint venture with other entities.

A joint venture is an association of entities that pursues a limited number of specific or limited-purpose business ventures by combining their efforts, money, and skills. A joint venture can allow the small business to collaborate with other entities to obtain government contracts that it may be unable to obtain and perform with its expertise alone.

Joint ventures can open new avenues to obtain government contracts without the affiliation risks associated with equity investments. However, if the joint venture is awarded more than three contracts in a two-year period, the participants will be considered affiliates.

In addition, the small business’s share of the joint ventures receipts and employees will be included in the calculation of its size, so the business should determine how the joint venture will affect its size status.

Legislation to boost DOD mentor-proteges

Sens. Joni Ernst, R-IA, and Martin Heinrich, D-NM, introduced legislation to reauthorize and improve the DOD Mentor-Protege Program that expired last year.

The Defense Small Business Advancement Act (S 1320) is likely to be considered as part of the Senate Armed Services Committee’s upcoming national defense authorization bill for fiscal 2020. Ernst chairs a subcommittee, and Heinrich is a ranking member of a subcommittee, on the Armed Services panel. Reps. Xochitl Torres Small, D-NM, and Lloyd Smucker, R-PA, submitted a companion bill in the House.

As part of the Senate bill, an independent study would be commissioned to recommend changes to the program based on data.

Proteges have been awarded $5.4 billion in DOD contracts since the program began in 1991, Ernst said. More information: https://bit.ly/2EnokH3

October 2018, according to testimony at the hearing.

Alba M. Aleman, chief executive of Citizant Inc., a small business providing technology services based in Chantilly, VA, told lawmakers her company was hit hard by the shutdown. She was one of several business owners who testified.

“Six of the federal programs we serve were immediately halted,” Aleman said at the hearing. “This affected 30 Citizant employees, cut $430,000 of revenue, forced a $200,000 loss in profitability and cost us more than $15,000 in interest expenses as we borrowed against our line of credit.”

Once the shutdown was over, the company faced long delays in getting paid. Payments stopped for all projects, though the company was contractually obligated to continue to perform. Unpaid invoices continued to climb until March 2019, putting the firm $4 million dollars in debt.

“I can’t begin to tell you the level of stress and panic that strikes at the heart of a business owner,” Aleman said, adding that she was prepared to withdraw all her retirement funds and savings to keep the business afloat and had signed additional agreements to extend her credit. “We lived payroll to payroll, in fear, and on high alert, begging and pleading daily with our government to please pay our invoices immediately.”

“When your only customer doesn’t pay you for several months and you have breached your borrowing capacity, you face the dire prospect of filing for bankruptcy and selling off parts of the company for pennies on the dollar. We were within days of having to take such drastic action,” Aleman told the committee.

$106M to NASA SBIRs

Platforms that can be set up with magnets only, pilotless aircraft and Moon-based solar panels are among the technologies that NASA is advancing in $106 million of awards under the Small Business Innovation Research Program (SBIR) Phase II.

NASA selected 142 proposals for the award agreements, which max out at $750,000 each.

Vendors owing taxes

The Army and Navy, Energy, HHS and the VA awarded 1,849 contracts to contractors that reported delinquent federal tax debts over $3,500 each, according to an analysis by the GAO.

The agencies said they never received notice of those tax debts, and therefore the awarded contracts may have been in violation, the GAO said.

Seven vendors who owed a total of over $250,000 in taxes were awarded $510,000 in contracts. Read more at https://bit.ly/2wdqfJM.
